After the passing of Marley and his family the Marley's, their estate and business passed to his sons and the next generation. Sometimes after that generations depart from any kind of leadership at all, passing the torch or simply leaving the company entirely or losing ownership. The highest level of control is termed "Membership" and the lowest form is just that of "Owner" who merely holds the titles and has no actual function or authority over the company, but is required to fulfill statutory duties for the company. A less formal version is termed "Managing" where a single person holds ownership and is the sole person to be considered for any "management" of the company, though this is often more like a ceremonial title than an actual position. A very high-level version is "Chairman" or "Chief Executive Officer" whose only job is to make sure that the company operates, and is separate from the day-to-day running of the business, running everything under the CEO's direction or supervision. Beach Common Sense Rising Seas: Will our coastal communities and economies survive? In the next 20 years we will experience the greatest sea level rise in the recorded history of North America. Coastal communities and their inhabitants are already feeling the impact of rising seas, and it is becoming harder and harder for many to do business in places where they have been for decades. During a recent interview, I was fortunate to speak with the Vice President of the Coastal Carolina Council of Governments, Kerry Cormier. She spoke about the need to discuss the vulnerability of our coastal communities and what can be done to lessen its impact. Their interactive map, Rising Seas: Will our coastal communities survive? can be found at CCCOG – very informative. As you dig into the wealth of information, keep a few things in mind: (1) Communities often build special flood maps, or SFM's, to show where flooding will occur if the sea level rises four feet. These maps frequently do not reflect the actual flood risk which is because your computer program (which is generally based on your elevation) may not correctly estimate the risk. The risk is often based on the actual elevation but is made into a flood map which is based on a 42 year average with no consideration for the actual elevation. (2) Rising seas also creates greater storm surge and other coastal hazards. In many coastal communities, built up areas already protect people from these hazards. However, these built up areas are frequently on higher ground. (3) Coastlines are extremely sensitive to erosion. Tides and storm surges combine to erode or wash away the coast which causes the beach to be recessed. These storms also contribute to the erosional forces and cause the bottom of a beach to slough off. No amount of sand is going to remedy this because it is far too delicate of an environment. (4) Many communities have identified that the only things that save them from the rising sea level are the curtailing of development, not just for new construction, but also for existing communities. Unfortunately, many communities are allowing new development with higher elevations. Also, some communities are not taking the issue of sea level rise seriously enough. (5)
