“What’s happening is that in the 1960s and 1970s, a group of bookings agents in the Bay Area figured out how to get a lot of money together and put together a listing. Those transactions were so simple and easy that they could be done in person, so I think there’s a lot of turnover.” Brian Meikle

The San Francisco Board of Supervisors recently approved a 5-0 vote to pay $10,000 to the city’s Department of Homelessness and Supportive Housing. The money will help fund the casework services for first-time applicants hoping to obtain permanent housing with the city. Supervisor David Campos introduced the motion. “The goal of the study is to get these folks to safety, to get them a little help, and then get them what they need for their permanent housing,” Campos said. The study, which was requested by the Department of Homelessness and Supportive Housing and San Francisco Mayor London Breed, will explore why some people living in the city without shelter accept temporary housing, while others decline it.
